

Academic Integrity

Central Alabama Community College expects all members of its academic community to live by the highest principles of academic integrity and responsibility. Academic misconduct is a serious violation of the trust that must exist between faculty and students, and it undermines the integrity of the academic experience. All members of the academic community are responsible for accurately giving credit to the ideas of others, so students should be diligent in citing source material which has been paraphrased, summarized, or quoted directly. Consequences for academic misconduct may include being required to retake an examination or resubmit an assignment, receiving an “F” on the given exam or assignment, or receiving an “F” for the course.
